BERKSHIRE'S TWO GOVERNORS

From The Berkshire Hills, August 1, 1901

MEN OF THE PEOPLE

It is and always will be a matter of deep pride to the citizenship of Berkshire that though in a period of 120 years it has given the State of Massachusetts but two Governors, both have been men of the people and as such have stood as firmly and solidly for popular rights as the old mountains within whose shadows they had their birth. Both came of a sturdy, industrious, honest and pioneer God-fearing New England ancestry and keeping step with the principles of their lineage, won by honorable toil in their respective callings those rare mental gifts, through widely different channels, which combined with sterling character and integrity have given them enduring fame and name.

George Nixon Briggs was born in a humble two-story house which stood in 1796 upon the present site of the Universalist Church in the present town of Adams. He was the eleventh child of Allen Briggs, a sturdy Baptist, and of Nancy Brown, a Quaker of Huguenot descent. The two having removed thither from Cranston and Cumberland, Rhode Island. His father was a skillful blacksmith and worked early and late at the anvil to support his large family, and of such strong character that he never bowed his neck to any man. George was a light-haired good-natured lad, a favorite of the mother and family, and much beloved by his father. When he was but seven years of age he went to Manchester, Vt. with his parents. From thence they moved to White Creek, N.Y., in 1805, where he in tender youth embraced the Christian faith, astonished all who knew him as a boy convert and speaker, obtained a little schooling, did chores for his father, and served an apprenticeship of five years to Quaker John Allen, a manufacturer of hats.

STUDIES LAW IN ADAMS AND LANESBORO

In 1813 he paid a visit to Rufus, his eldest brother, at Hudson, N.Y., with $5 in his pocket and his clothes bundled in a handkerchief, who aided him out of his slender means until his death three years afterwards, to study law. That year he put in an appearance at South Adams with an old hair trunk upon his back and a $10 wardrobe within it. He boarded with his Uncle Jesse Whipple, a stone-cutter, who afterwards with his son David removed to Holden street, North Adams. Here George studied law with Esquire Kasson for a year, for which he was charged $30 for tuition and the use of library, and for fire-wood and candles. In 1814 he repaired to Lanesboro and commenced the study of law with Luther Washburn, and became an inmate of the home of the then noted town physician, Dr. William H. Tyler, who after the death of his brother Rufus aided him to acquire his legal education, and was his life long physician and friend. In order to patch out his slender means he became town clerk, copied legal and other papers and taught in the district schools. Here he became deeply attached to Hon. Henry Shaw and many notable men then residing in the old town, and from the former received most substantial aid and friendship, and through this relationship became a great admirer of Henry Clay.

LAW PRACTICE AT SOUTH ADAMS

In 1817 he was very prominent in a Lanesboro revival conducted by Rev. Mr. Beach in which there were twelve conversions, among whom was his future wife, Harriet, daughter of Ezra and Triphena Hall. With these converts and Dr. Tyler, wife and daughter, he formed the Baptist Church of Lanesboro. He was admitted to the Berkshire Bar in 1818, and with his wife removed to South Adams and opened a law office. He was very poor and very hospitable to everyone and did not derive much from the practice of his profession. In fact he tried to effect a settlement of all cases coming to him, and thus keep them out of court. He paid a $30 rental for his little office, lived in a three-roomed little green cottage with no cellar, and kept open house for neighbors, strangers, ministers and dependent relations, and was full of kind ministrations to the sick and the poor. It was an accepted fact that every wandering preacher and agent's horse knew where George Nixon Briggs lived.

Though he was always striving to have his clients compromise and advising them to be their own lawyers by looking over their cases carefully, and understanding them, to do what was right, and that in doing this in nine cases out of ten they would find the law on their side, in obstinate cases he secured enough of fees to struggle along. But his poverty greatly hampered him, though he was much respected and stood in the way like a lion against any rapid rise in his profession or otherwise. In fact in these days he would have been elected to the Legislature, had not a prominent citizen of the town objected on the score that George "owned no property."

COMES TO THE FRONT IN HIS PROFESSION

Removing back to Lanesboro in 1824 he opened an office in the lower town, served as town clerk, as chairman of highway commissioners of the county, and having been appointed to defend an Indian who committed the first murder in the county, by his able, eloquent plea for the prisoner, who was nevertheless executed, first came to the front as an able and powerful lawyer in the old Court of Common Pleas. In this case, by his grand defense of this Indian, he won the admiration and applause of the Berkshire public to such an extent that in a single stride he went to the front as the best jury lawyer in Western Massachusetts, though there were many noted attorneys in the county bar at that time. In the many famous pleas made by him he became so lost in his cases that he often said he was often unaware of the presence of any one but the jury and himself. As a lawyer who dissuaded clients from paying him fees, a Christian philanthropist who kept open house for everybody, supported dependent relatives, fed the hungry, clothed the naked, soothed the sons and daughters of sorrow in lowly homes and ministered to the unfortunate, he did not grow forehanded pecuniarily - in fact great possessions never hindered his progress heavenward.

CONGRESSMAN, GOVERNOR AND JUDGE

In 1830 he was elected to Congress in which he served with signal ability, success and to the satisfaction of his constituency for twelve years. Here he became intimate with Andrew Jackson, Henry Clay, John Quincy Adams, Rufus Choate, John Randolph, Thomas F. Marshall and all the famous statesmen of those earlier days and by whom he was ever held in distinguished regard. In 1844 he removed to Pittsfield and resided in a small house on East street which is still standing, and from thence removed to the well known homestead on West street. The same year he was elected Governor and served as such for a period of seven years, giving the people of the State the best of service from first to last and retiring from the same with distinguished honors. In 1833 he was appointed a Judge of the Court of Common Pleas, Judge Henry W. Bishop of Lenox being a colleague on the bench, which office he filled until 1858 when this court was abolished and the present Superior Court of the Commonwealth was established. Then retiring from active life he died from the effects of the accidental discharge of a shot gun in his residence, Sept. 8, 1861.

THE FIRST TEMPERANCE APOSTLE

George N. Briggs was the first and most prominent temperance apostle of Berkshire County, and in this work he grew into so wide a reputation that it became national. He held the first Berkshire County temperance meeting in Baker's Tavern in North Lanesboro, in 1826, at which twelve people were present. Early experience had shown him the power of appetite over will and led him to abstain from drink, tobacco, and snuff. In this meeting he convinced the most of his hearers that liquor was not necessary in washing sheep, harvesting or cutting wood, and that in total abstinence was the only safety. From the time of leaving his home on the hilltop to the east of the lower Lanesboro village in a blinding snow storm for Washington, on the old stage coach running through Hancock to Troy, he was the leading power in the nation for total abstinence, and great were his eloquent labors not only in the old meeting and school houses from one end of the county to the other, but in the language of Rev. John Leland, "he drove a cold water horse right into the city of and capitol at Washington." In 1833 he was the leader in a Congressional Temperance Society and associated with Hon. Theodore Frelinghuysen of New Jersey, Hon. George Blair of Tennessee and Hon. E. Cook of Ohio, and after its lapse in 1840, its revival and president and the master spirit in a great Washingtonian meeting in the Hall of Representatives with Thomas F. Marshall of Kentucky as his colleague, who had taken the total abstinence pledge at his hands in an open congressional session and before the assembled statesmen of the country. In the National Temperance Convention in Philadelphia in 1833, and at Saratoga in 1836, he took the stand for total abstinence and carried captive with his fearless eloquence the understanding and hearts of those present. Before leaving Washington he was presented with a massive gold medal by the Freeman's Total Abstinence Society, which with many other memorials of like character he called his "crown jewels." After being chosen Governor, as President of the Massachusetts Legislative Temperance Society, he was most active through all his term of service, and once led a great procession of reformed men in a mighty march through the streets of Boston.

IN EVERY SENSE A TRUE MAN

At home or abroad, as Congressman and Governor, he was unassuming, modest and eminently democratic in appearance, life and habits. As Governor he resided in unpretentious apartments in the old Adams House on Washington street, and kept the company of those who respected themselves and feared God. On taking the gubernatorial chair his historian says he was criticized by newspaper reporters for his unpretentious manners and appearance "from his head to his boots," while his habit of wearing no linen collar was much commented upon. Though his habitual use of the old fashioned "satin stock" was said to be the result of a bargain with a friend of his youth "that he would wear no collar if his friend would abandon intoxicating drinks," his historian asserts that he wore this neck-clothing "for comfort and from choice." In this connection it may be stated that in 1833 Mrs. Briggs took first premium of $8 in a set of silver spoons at the Berkshire County Fair for the best exhibition of woven woolen cloth, of which Mr. Briggs was so proud that he wore a suit made from this beautiful home-made material in Washington.

WINTHROP MURRAY CRANE

Winthrop Murray Crane of Dalton, called upon by the Republican party and the independent popular vote in 1898 to become Lieutenant-Governor for two terms because of his rare political sagacity and independence, broad knowledge of men and state and national affairs, marked wisdom and experience in finance, and now presiding in his second year as the Chief Magistrate of this Commonwealth, after the lapse of over half a century is again as a Berkshire citizen adding fresh fame in this position to Berkshire County, in such as well by the firm and fearless championship of the rights of the people, wise and economical administration of the financial interests of the Commonwealth, and broad and liberal management of its affairs, he has not only won the respect and confidence of an admiring constituency intent on continuing him in longer service, but commanded the attention of the nation.

In many respects the history and character of Berkshire's latest and present Governor bears close resemblance to its first, though both may be said to have come into public prominence from entirely divergent standpoints of life and to have been called into public service for distinctly different talents and abilities. The ancestry of Governor Crane was also thoroughly New England. His educational advantages or school days were limited, and like his predecessor in this office he learned a trade under apprenticeship. While the first turned to a profession in which to win his way up to popular notice and eminence, the other came into distinction through the channels of a manufacture which he had mastered, strict integrity in dealing and in purpose, rare financial capacity and ability, and a deep and powerful insight into the character and motives of mankind, seeking rather to elevate and uphold, rather than discourage and dethrone. Energetic, industrious and quick to execute, true and firm to his convictions, unassuming and approachable to all, open-handed and sympathetic, fearless for the right and God-fearing, a true servant of the people, he has honored his race and generation, the locality which gave him birth, and those who sought him out and placed him in the position which he so ably and conspicuously fills.

BERKSHIRE MEN OF WORTH

Berkshire Men of Worth was first used as the caption for Joseph Ward Lewis' column in the Berkshire Evening Eagle of January 10, 1934. Approximately 300 articles followed.

The Eleazer Brown homestead on Orchard St., Adams, was the scene of the 14th annual reunion of the Brown family this afternoon (August 4, 1934), with 150 descendants present from many places in the East.

Attorney J. Ward Lewis of Pittsfield, who contributes a column regularly to the Eagle was the speaker of the day. His address dealt with three men with Berkshire connections, whose lives were worth while and notable - Joshua A. Spencer, Deacon Alexander Hyde and Lewellyn Pratt.

William B. Browne, Registrar of Deeds, presided. His sister, Miss Frances E. Browne, is president of the Eleazer Brown Homestead Association.

Mr. Lewis' address follows:

THREE MEN OF WORTH

First, Joshua A. Spencer, a lawyer, born in Great Barrington on May 13, 1790, who became an important figure in the public life of Central New York; second, Deacon Alexander Hyde, farmer and teacher, who spent his whole life in Lee and whose teachings and writings were an influence for good in numberless lives; the third, Lewellyn Pratt, a native of Connecticut, teacher and preacher, who came to this country and returned thence to the Nutmeg State, whose contacts with Berkshire and Berkshire folks were numerous and extensive, and whose life work was pleasantly and nobly done.

When Russell Sturgis Cook, native of New Marlboro, corresponding secretary of the American Tract Society, was planning the Berkshire Jubilee, he chanced to meet Joshua Spencer, "on the rail cars west of Albany," and at once felt that he had found the orator for the occasion. He made no mistake, as the event proved. Spencer's story is most interesting. In his early teens he went with his father's family to Madison County, New York. The early years of his life were employed in manual and mechanical labors. In this school of hard knocks he gained a very useful knowledge of human nature which served him well in his years of practice at the bar. He read all the books he could lay his hands on and his oldest brother, Ichabod, soldier and lawyer, taught him the rudiments of law. Ichabod was reared in Great Barrington. Brother Thomas, born there, was a noted writer and teacher of medicine, and there was a fourth brother, a Presbyterian clergyman of excellent worth. Central New York owed much to this southern Berkshire family. In 1829, young lawyer Spencer removed to Utica and there made a marked success as a practitioner before juries and courts. He was attorney for the defense in a very famous case, the trial of Alexander McLeod for murder, at Utica in 1842. The case was the subject of extended diplomatic exchanges between the British government and Secretary of State Daniel Webster, and several presidential messages dealt with the case. It was believed that if the prisoner was convicted and the State of New York attempted to execute him, England would declare war. Spencer, then the foremost jury lawyer in the entire country, tried the case with matchless ability and summed it up with great power. McLeod was acquitted. Spencer had been retained by the British government, which paid him $5000 for his services, a very large fee for that day. He was an active Whig, a man of fine religious character, interested in education, generous in his gifts to church and school. He died in Utica in 1857.

Spencer made it a part of his religion, as he said, "to go back to Berkshire once a year." His oration at the Jubilee was a careful and brilliant account of leading incidents in the settlement, history and then-present condition of Berkshire.

On one of his visits to Great Barrington he talked with a young man who had been studying law with William Cullen Bryant, Elias Warner Leavenworth, with the result that Leavenworth located in Syracuse, where he had a distinguished career as lawyer, Secretary of State and Congressman, and in diverse and extensive civic community-serving activities. When Leavenworth was Secretary of State he called upon Chester Dewey, a native of Sheffield, Williams graduate, teacher in Pittsfield, educator in Rochester, for advice in technical matters connected with a monumental work on the natural history of New York State, on which the State expended a million dollars or more. General Leavenworth also attended the Jubilee.

Reverend Alvan Hyde was pastor of the Congregational Church in Lee for 41 years. Alexander was the youngest of his eleven children and nine sons. Four of the nine sons were graduates of Williams College. All of the children who reached maturity went out from the home to lead honored and useful lives. Joseph Hyde became treasurer of the American Bible Society. Alexander was born September 25, 1814. He graduated at Williams in the class of 1834. He inherited the old homestead, still standing on West Park Street in Lee, and there established a family boarding school for boys. The story of this schoolmaster is one of unpretentious usefulness. For thirty years he maintained the school; he did most of the teaching himself and had all the management. He came to be regarded by the boys as a friend and they carried into the world most grateful recollections of his kindly interest in their behalf. Many students went from the school to Williams College, where they did well, and later attained positions of honor and influence in the world. His pupils came from all parts of the country and some from foreign countries. One of Mr. Hyde's pupils was the father of President Roosevelt; another was Arthur Gilman, long regent of Radcliffe College. The educational influence exercised by Deacon Hyde was extended to the public schools of the town. He was chairman of the School Committee; Principal Abner Rice of the high school said he was the committee. Joseph White of Williamstown, for many years secretary of the State Board of Education, regarded Mr. Hyde as one of the three best School Committeemen in the State.

Deacon Hyde gave thought and effort to the advancement of agriculture and wrote and lectured on theoretical topics of farming. He never knew how to make farming pay; he did not succeed in practicing what he preached. But the farmers of the region found valuable hints in his preachments. He stimulated the farmers to adopt improved methods of cultivation of the soil, of fruit culture and of stock breeding. He contributed a weekly article to the New York Times for many years and wrote for other publications. He delivered a course of lectures before the Lowell Institute in Boston; they were published in the Springfield Republican as delivered and later in book form. They attracted wide attention in agricultural circles. Toward the close of his life Mr. Hyde was appointed president of the Massachusetts Agricultural College at Amherst. He declined the honor.

Deacon Hyde was intensely interested in philanthropy in its most comprehensive aspects. He was especially interested in the welfare of the three "despised races," the African, the Indian and the Chinaman. He was for many years a trustee of Hampton Institute and never missed a meeting of the board. He contributed to the limit of his ability and often beyond it, to the support of the Institute. General Armstrong, who knew his circumstances, returned the last contribution which he knew was beyond Mr. Hyde's means. As an aside, it may be stated that General Armstrong's first wife was a niece of Deacon Hyde's wife, whose father was Lieutenant Governor George Hull of Sandisfield.

He was the first president of the Berkshire Historical Society and a paper written by him on "Social Life and Customs of the Early Citizens of Berkshire," is preserved in one of the publications of the society.

Mr. Hyde "was an enthusiast for Berkshire, for its scenery, for its history, for its men, for its institutions." He died as he had lived, always at the post of duty. In the fall of 1880 he was elected to the Legislature, where he was stricken suddenly on the steps of the State House and soon passed away on January 11, 1881.

Lewellyn Pratt graduated at Williams College in 1852 and received the degree of D.D. from his alma mater in 1877. In 1871 he became pastor of the Congregational Church in North Adams where he succeeded Washington Gladden. He was immediately successful in making a large place for himself not only in his church but as a civil leader in the community. It is said that to the period of his pastorate in the Tunnel City "with all its stress and complexity, he always looked back with a special glow of delight." The preacher naturally had frequent contracts with the college life, especially as his son, Waldo Selden Pratt was a student in Williamstown. In 1875 Dr. Pratt delivered some lectures at the college and in 1876 he accepted the chair of rhetoric, logic and aesthetics, which had been vacated by John Bascom, who had gone to the presidency of Wisconsin University. In 1879 Dr. Pratt was acting pastor of the Congregational Church in Stockbridge and for a brief period took up his residence in the town. From 1884 to 1889 he was alumni trustee of Williams. Through the years he retained his interest in the college and in Berkshire. He attended the 60th reunion of his class in 1912, the year before his death. So much for the Berkshire contacts of Dr. Pratt, who might well be classed as an adopted son of Berkshire.

For the rest of this life story - he was the son of a mason and farmer, Selden Mather Pratt, in Centerbrook, a village in the town of Essex in Middlesex County, Connecticut. He was born August 8, 1832. His ancestry in both parental lines was distinguished. His mother belonged to the Nott family in the line in which President Eliphalet Nott of Union College. His father was descended from the second wife of Governor Bradford of Plymouth. He had two sisters and eight brothers. All but one came to active maturity. Five of Selden's sons graduated at Williams College; both daughters at Mount Holyoke. Lewellyn, his brother, Henry Lyman, and Professor Arthur Latham Perry, the economist, were classmates. The last of the brothers died May 6 of this year at Carlsbad, New Mexico. All of the brothers were men of high character and eminently successful. Three of them were teachers of the deaf and dumb. It was to this work that Lewellyn devoted more than fifteen years after graduation, except for a short time in which he engaged in business. He taught in the Pennsylvania Institute for the Deaf and Dumb at Philadelphia. In 1868 he became professor of natural sciences in the comparatively young National Deaf Mute College in Washington, D.C., later called Gallaudet College. He served as acting president of the college during the absence in Europe of Dr. Edward N. Gallaudet, the founder. In 1869, Dr. Pratt became editor of the magazine The American Annals of the Deaf and Dumb. Dr. Pratt had studied theology in Philadelphia, under the famous Albert Barnes. In May, 1864, he was ordained to the Presbyterian ministry and was in much request as a preacher.

He was active in the formation of the Republican Party in 1854; in 1856 he was one of the secretaries in the convention that nominated Fremont for the presidency. It was said of him that while his political sympathies were ardent and his convictions positive, he did not forget to be just to opponents and he had no resentments to cherish afterward.

In 1869 he became professor of Latin at Knox College in Galesburg, Ill., of which his brother-in-law, John P. Gulliver, was president and he also became pastor of the Second Presbyterian Church. Soon after going to Galesburg, he was elected a trustee of the Theological Seminary of the Northwest in Chicago, later called McCormick Seminary. In 1871 he received a call to Oakland, California, but declined it to accept the North Adams pastorate.

Dr. Pratt left Berkshire to take the chair of homiletics and pastoral care in Hartford Theological Seminary, where his teaching and preaching experiences were utilized in teaching preachers how to preach. In 1886 he went to the pastorate of the Broadway Congregational Church in Norwich, Connecticut, where he remained until his death June 14, 1913. During his residence in Norwich he was active officially and in other ways in the affairs of the Norwich Free Academy; from 1888 to 1913 he as a trustee of the Hartford Seminary; in 1889 he became a corporate member of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions; for fourteen years he was a member of the executive committee of the American Missionary Association, going monthly to New York to attend its meetings; from 1889 to 1895 he was a trustee of Atlanta University. He was a member of the Connecticut Historical Society and of the Society of Biblical Literature and Exegesis.

Dr. Pratt had a way with him and everybody liked him.

It was said of those who repaired the house of the Lord in the days of Josiah, the son of David, "the men did the work faithfully."

These men of whom I have been speaking did the work faithfully. They were types - the native who went out to make a name for himself; the native who did his part in the home of his father; and the stranger who came to Berkshire and tarried for a while only - many such can be found in the Book of Berkshire.
